President/CEO Lessons Learned

- Initially focus on one product/service
  - Be clear in what you are offering (Test: Do employees and customers describe the company consistently?)
  - Can add products/services over time; but only once initial offering is well established
- Know when you need to hire expertise
  - Emerging business owners start by doing everything themselves
  - Recognize your strengths and accept when it’s time to bring in people smarter than yourself in an area (CFO, Business Development, Operations)
  - Initial staffing hires should bring diversity to your background
- Banking (and other “external” services)
  - Seek sources like you; start-ups, smaller in field
  - Everything has to be in writing
- Know when to say stop
  - Set clear goals when investing in a new product line, market, or location
  - Be willing to shut it down if it doesn’t achieve the goals within the time allocated
- Take time for yourself and your family; your business will still be there tomorrow

Capability Statement

- Identify your Core Capability and strive to be a market leader
- Be specific - communicate clearly and effectively to potential partners or clients about your capabilities
- Do your homework - Familiarizing yourself with the particular agency or customer you are targeting and make sure they need the services or products you are selling
- Be prepared to deliver a concise “elevator speech”
- Define your capability succinctly - This will differentiate your business from your competitor
- Provide specific information that will assist potential clients to make a decision on whether they should do business with you
- Follow up and follow through
Networking

- Attend conferences and supplier fairs that is related to your field

- Large businesses that have contracts with small business requirements aligned to your capabilities is where you should target

- The small business office is your friend and can help you navigate agencies and customers

- If you came from Government or industry, you have a leg up. It’s that simple. If you didn’t, you’ll have to do everything above but more aggressively
Proposal Capability

- Take a Business Development for Government Contractors course

- Learn how to create and manage a pipeline of opportunities that are aligned with what your core capabilities are.

- Learn how to qualify those opportunities. The best companies are the ones that know how to walk away when success is improbable, even when you’re emotionally invested.

- Maintain a network of consultants that can help you develop proposals.

- You can achieve this through networking and formal or informal Mentor Protégé relationship
Habits for Success

➢ Focus
  ✷ Maintain a sense of strategic focus on a capability and client base
  ✷ Understand all contracts that your client has and which services on those contracts align to your core capabilities.
  ✷ If you do not focus you will not be able to put forth the proper effort and resources to succeed

➢ Be Professional
  ✷ Have high standards & expect the same from your team
  ✷ Always behave with integrity
  ✷ Stand behind quality of anything you committed to deliver

➢ Reflect
  ✷ Learn from your failures
  ✷ Document lessons learned
  ✷ Learning from experience will create behavioral change and create new processes

➢ Perseverance
  ✷ No one will give you work because of your company classification
  ✷ Never give up
